

PROTECTAHOME LTD PEST CONTROL

Targeting problems with the best solutions

Established 1980

Case Study : 182

PEST CONTROL - MICE INFESTATION, DOMESTIC CLIENT, NEWPORT

THE PROBLEM

Mrs Peters, the new Owner of a detached Victorian property in Newport was suffering from what she thought was a Squirrel problem in her roof. Her family had been hearing scratching noises coming from the attic in the middle of the night. After a couple of days of severe disturbance, Mrs Peters decided to call in Protectahome Pest Control.

THE SOLUTION

Our local BPCA accredited Technician visited the property the very day Mrs Peters called our office's. He completed a thorough Survey of the attic to determine the nature and extent of the problem. During the inspection the Technician came across Rodent droppings, gnawed wires and nesting materials. It was evident to him that the Pest problem was actually attributable to Mice and not Squirrels.

The Technician strategically placed bait stations in the attic area and used tamper resistant bait boxes in the living areas of the home, complying with best practice and industry regulations.

To bring the Mouse problem under control, we visited the property several times. With the problem resolved our Technician worked on preventing another infestation. We talked to the client about proofing and a long term bait plan, including visits timed to break the rodent breeding cycle.

Three principle factors that must be managed to prevent problems with Mice are potential Entry Points, Harbourage and Food Source's. As part of a prevention strategy we conducted an external inspection of the building. Our Technician identified several potential Points of Entry for Mice and advised the owner to clear all rubbish from the garden. He also made them aware that the ivy climbing up the property was making access to the property easy for the Mice and that this issue should be addressed. An infestation of Mice can quickly take hold if not treated by a Pest Control Expert. For more information or a rapid response service, Contact Us Now.

UK ENQUIRY LINE

0845 601 1980

www.protectahome.co.uk

